

Recovery Work Incentives Project

Working Works!

Resources to Help People Enhance Financial and Occupational Wellness

One of the most important factors that affects our health is income. Having enough money affects access to health care, housing, food, and other necessities in life. Increasing income is possible through work and it is possible for people who have Social Security disability benefits. The Social Security Administration (SSA) has special rules called Work Incentives that help people who have Supplemental Security Income (SSI), Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI), and Medicaid or Medicare health insurance benefits work. By working and using the Work Incentives, people can have more money to spend each month and have health insurance to pay for the health care they need. The Recovery Work Incentives (RWI) project is designed to provide information and practical tips about these incentives.

Our message is simple: "Working Works!"

There is hope for achieving financial wellness. People with benefits can start to work at a pace that is right for them and plan ways to have benefits and health insurance that they want and need. Fact sheets and tip sheets help people:

Know the Basics about how working affects benefits.

Ask the Experts for help with their specific situation.

Choose What to Do based on the information, advice from the experts, and what is best for them.

Use the Work Incentives to achieve financial goals.

Visit our website at members.ccbh.com/health-topics/recovery-work-incentives for practical guides to using the work incentives.